“ Well sis..I haven’t heard your voice for 73 hours. I have never gone 73 hours without talking to you...haven’t gone 24 hours without talking to you. I can’t imagine this new normal. There have been no less than 10 things since Saturday that I would have asked you about or needed your guidance on. I can promise I will always be there for the boys, Sarah and Kae. I absolutely will not be capable of fixing anything electrical, mechanical or technical in mommy’s house, or in my car, like you always could. You and dad had very high standards when it came to that stuff. One thing is for sure...you are a tough act to follow.

“A”, I will miss you forever. I will miss your never ending crazy humor, your guidance and wisdom, your endless talents, your loyalty, your love for our family, your smile, your new cars every 2 years (sometimes more frequent) and buying every infomercial product you could find. I will even miss your “chapel” text on Thursday mornings reminding me not to call you and disturb you in church. I’m not sure what the road ahead looks like without you by my side. I do know what it feels like just for 73 hours. You have left a void in my life and in this family that can’t be filled. I can promise I will try, I can’t promise I will succeed.

My comfort comes from knowing and believing that daddy needed someone with him and it was you. My comfort comes from knowing he isn’t without all of us anymore, he has you. He must have needed a haircut and a shave! Please do not forget his eyebrows.

In my mind I have the vision of him welcoming you with open arms. For you to feel him hug you again and for me to know he was there for you is what makes this somewhat bearable. You and he are now together forever.

Rest easy big sis...we got it from here.

Will love and miss you for forever and a day.

“ I can't believe one of my childhood friends is gone. I have so many memories of us growing up together! I used to love when our families got together on Christmas Eve. I remember walking to the Martino's house in the snow! You are someone that I will always remember as a kind, good person. You will be missed my friend!
